Operation Tohidu®

Operation Tohidu® is an experiential and educational retreat designed for a growing population of warfighters living with post-traumatic stress, mild-to-moderate traumatic brain injury, and other service-related traumas. "Tohidu" is a Cherokee word meaning peace of mind, body, and spirit.

At Operation Tohidu® retreats, veterans focus on confidence-building, outdoor activities, and group discussion in a relaxed, positive environment, learning proven techniques for self-management of symptoms, stressors, and responses.

Operation Tohidu® Highlights

- Operated by veterans for veterans.
- A formal diagnosis of PTS(d) is not required.
- 10-16 participants per retreat.
- Retreats are held monthly (September to May).

The retreats are held at Melwood's 108-acre Recreation Center in Nanjemoy, Maryland, a town named after a Native American tribe. In this peaceful and secluded environment, participants connect with nature and their fellow warriors to become educated about alternative techniques to better manage anxiety and post-traumatic stress. Guests participate in a combination of educational and experiential activities using an adventure-based counseling model and the challenge-by-choice principle.

We welcome veterans and active duty service members from anywhere in the United States. Anyone who has been diagnosed or is self-reporting with post-traumatic stress or other service-related trauma is eligible to attend.

The 5-day retreat is free of charge to veterans and active duty service members, including accommodations and travel.

Experiential Learning Retreats

Melwood Veterans Services offers retreats for men, women, and couples. Our goal is to help participants transition to life outside the military by teaching coping strategies and skills they can use to move forward successfully at home and in their communities.

Retreats for Men – Open to all male veterans from any era of service, regardless of time-in-service, who are suffering from service-related trauma.

Retreats for Couples – Open to all veterans and their partners who are struggling with the effects that service-related trauma may have on their relationship and/or family.

Retreats for Women – Open to all female veterans from any era of service, regardless of time-in-service, who are suffering from service-related trauma.

Retreats for MST Survivors – Open to veterans who struggle with the effects that military sexual trauma has had on their ability to lead fulfilling lives and/or maintain healthy relationships.
